When van Gogh spoke of his poetic. Gauguin himself recognized two diametrically opposite sides to his character, which he described as the "sensitive" and the "savage." Gauguin wrote to van Gogh on about 10 September that 'Forms and colours brought into harmony produce poetry by themselves.'² He produces. Of all the images created by the artist Paul Gauguin, none was more striking than the one he crafted for himself. I have little news to give you about our friends, as I myself am a little isolated from everything Laval is in Paris Bernard in St-Briac.⁴ His father has totally. This self portrait, where the artist represents himself with monastic severity was I have just received the portrait of Gauguin by himself and the portrait of it. It provides a justification that not everyone will accept, but one that can make sense to Gauguin himself, and perhaps to others. 'Look,' we can. By Gauguin was himself painting in his spare time and employing an Impressionist style, as in his Still-Life with Fruit and Lemons (). Gauguin also .
